Let's Start!

Ready to talk to the boss?

Learning Outcome

Describe past experiences in communicative situations.

Ask your partner:

- Do you like your boss?
- Is it easy to speak to your boss? Why or why not?
- When is it sometimes difficult to speak to your boss?

Can Do Statements

- I can talk about jobs and work.
- I can talk about past experiences.
- I can talk about things and actions.

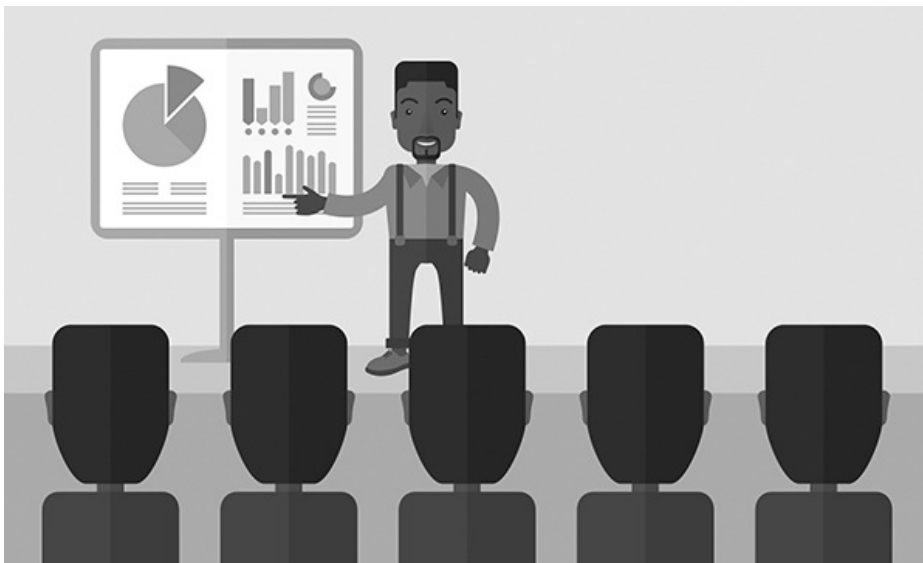

Let's Explore!

Did you understand* the report? Let's see if you understood*!

* You use "did" when you ask a question in the past tense.

 "Understood" is the past tense of the verb to understand.

Instructions: Read the text aloud.

Mr. Lockerty: We are at the final point on the agenda: intern report.

Mr. Warren: I asked Peter to prepare a report about his new responsibilities, and to suggest improvements to the internship program. Peter, did you finish the report?

Peter: Ummm ... Yes, Mr. Warren, I completed the assignment, but ...

Mr. Warren: But?

Peter: My printer ran out of paper. I didn't print the whole report.

Ms. Truman: Oh dear.

Mr. Warren: Well then, let's discuss it now. Could you share your ideas on how to improve the program, Peter?

Peter: Well, I only began yesterday ...

Ms. Truman: You started three days ago, Peter.

Peter: Yes, but it took me two days before I understood my new responsibilities.

Mr. Warren: Fine. You can give us your report at the next meeting.

Peter: Thank you, Mr. Warren. I appreciate your understanding.

Let's Practice!

The Chairman asked Peter to do something at the meeting. What?

Learning Points

Talking to the Boss

You use the Simple Past tense to ask about feedback at work, like Did you ... ?

You use the Simple Present tense to respond to feedback or give thanks.

Here are some useful expressions you can use when you ask for feedback from your boss.

Be sure to thank your boss for the feedback.

Asking for Feedback	Thanking for Feedback
Did you want to review my project?	Thank you for your feedback.
I finished the assignment. Would you like to review it?	I appreciate your understanding.
Do you have any comments on my performance?	That is very useful for me.
Where do you think I need to improve?	I will remember that next time.
