Let's Start!

Writing Spot: Sally is excited about her trip. She is researching tourist attractions she wants to visit.

Learning Outcome

Accurately explain information about interests, hobbies, and preferences in communicative situations.

Can Do Statements

- I can talk about travel.
- I can write a blog entry.
- I can say what I would want and/or prefer to do.

Ask your partner:

- What activities do you like to do when you travel?
- Would you prefer to visit a city or go on a hike? Why?

Let's Explore!

Let's hear what Sally writes in her blog, Sally's Suitcase. What will her followers think?

* "Followers" are people who like to read or listen to something regularly.

Instructions: Read the text aloud.

The countdown is on!

It is not long now before I leave on my trip. I am so excited to visit famous European cities like Paris and Rome. In one of my blogs, I told you that I would like to visit the Eiffel Tower. Did I also say that I would also like to see the Colosseum in Rome? I can't wait!

I like to walk the streets in the older areas of towns and meet the local people. I also enjoy taking photographs of houses, museums and churches with beautiful architecture.

Sometimes, I prefer to sit in a park and people watch. You can learn so much about a culture when you see how other people live their lives.

As my followers know, I love blogging about food. Trying new cuisine is always fun! I am hoping that I can practice a bit of my Spanish in Europe. They might not understand me.

Wish me luck!

Let's Practice!

Can you remember what Sally wanted to do?

Learning Points

Saying What You Prefer

You use verbs with Infinitives like want to or need to to talk about what you prefer to do. You can use the structure prefer to + (verb) or prefer + (verb-ing) to say what you prefer in general.

The structure after prefer can be:

I prefer something to something else.

Example: I prefer swimming to running.

I prefer to do something rather than (do) something else.

Example: I prefer to walk rather than run.

Examples:

- I don't like jogging. I prefer to go for long walks.
- Sometimes, I prefer to sit at a park and people watch.
