Let's Start!

What's on the agenda?

Learning Outcome

Accurately use information about people's past experiences, interests and hobbies in communicative situations.

Ask your partner:

- Think about a meeting you attended. What was the topic?
- Who was at the meeting? Did you introduce yourself to other people?

Can Do Statements

- I can talk about jobs and work.
- I can introduce myself and other people at a meeting.
- I can express a goal or a purpose.

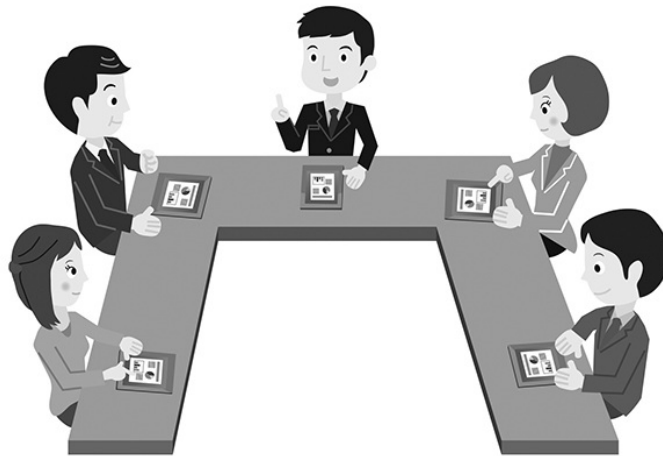

Let's Explore!

Peter is at a meeting. What items are on the agenda*?

* The "items" on an agenda are also called points.

 "On the agenda" means something is on a written list of things to talk about.

Instructions: Read the text aloud.

- Mr. Warren: Sorry for the short notice. I need to start the meeting. Let's begin with a roundtable. Please introduce yourself. I'm Joe Warren, president of the company. This is Dan Lockerty, today's chairperson.
- Mr. Lockerty: Hello.
- Ms. Truman: Hi, I'm Carol Truman. I'm vice-president.
- Peter: Hello, I'm Peter. I'm an intern. I look forward to participating in your meeting.
- Ms. Harrison: Good morning everybody. I'm Pamela Harrison, leader of the technical team.
- Ms. Major: I'm Susan Major, manager of Human Resources.
- Ms. Truman: What is your role, Susan?
- Ms. Major: I assign tasks.
- Mr. Warren: OK, let's get down to business. I have to leave in 30 minutes.
- Mr. Lockerty: The items on the agenda today are: participation on the software project, project objectives, boardroom improvements and intern report. Are there any additions? OK, let's begin!

Learning Points

Opening a Meeting

The chairperson usually opens a meeting. To 'open a meeting' means to start a meeting.

You use the Simple Present to open meetings. A meeting can start with a roundtable. A 'roundtable' is when you go around the table and each person says something.

Then, the chairperson reads the items (a list of things to be discussed) on the agenda. You use verbs with Infinitives like need to or have to to talk about the items of the meeting. The agenda is the list of things to talk about. You talk about each item separately.

The chairperson usually asks for additions to the agenda -- meaning other things you want to talk about during the meeting.

Examples:

- I'd like to start with a roundtable. Please introduce yourself and tell us what you think.
- The points on the agenda today are ...
- Are there any additions to the agenda?
- We need to talk about the following items in the agenda.
